Universitat de Barcelona

The University of Barcelona

Since it was founded in 1450, the University of Barcelona has become a benchmark institution for teaching, scientific research and knowledge creation in Spain and abroad. Its dynamic, critical and constructive qualities have always been placed at the service of the community and the country, where it strives to uphold the principles of freedom and equality and pursue its commitment to progress.

The UB's broad-ranging academic offering covers all the main areas of knowledge, with its eighteen faculties and its university school accommodating some ninety thousand students each year. In research, the UB works in innovative disciplines such as biomedicine and biotechnology but is also active in more traditional fields including experimental sciences, social sciences, the humanities, health, and fine arts, and its researchers publish in the most prestigious international journals.

Alongside teaching and research, areas such as internationalization, innovation, social and environmental responsibility, good governance, gender equality and ageing complete the portfolio of activities and initiatives carried out by the UB during the academic year 2011-2012.

The University of Barcelona now boasts two Campuses of International Excellence, the HUBc health campus and the BKC knowledge campus, the latter in conjunction with the Polytechnic University of Catalonia. As a research-intensive university, the UB generates more scientific output and achieves higher research performance indicators than any other higher education institution in Spain.

The figures recorded here summarize the University of Barcelona's activities over the course of the last academic year and give an idea of the work carried out.
